Editorial

The published papers contained in this issue of the journal reflect an optimistic tone of cross border collaboration and international cooperation among authors and co-authors. The effort demonstrated in the preparation of these papers is very commendable. The contributors come from many nations: Ukraine, Russia, Albania, Spain, Czech Republic, Slovakia, Israel, Canada and the United States. The papers address important social science and educational issues that affect the global community including homelessness, the social safety net, volunteerism, disabilities, social support for youth education and the use of digital technology in education.

Journal readers are encouraged to review these articles and give thought to publishing new and existing research as well as thoughtful pieces of potential value to the world-wide academic community.
